

Daily Appeal
EVENING EDITION
ATLANTA, GA.

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 4, 1864.

THE NEWS.
The telegraph line between Atlanta and Macon is down this morning, hence no news from Virginia.

Parties from Marietta report that the front early this morning, which was caused by the heavy rain, is still continuing on our right, endeavoring to get back to the railroad. Gen. Johnston is making such dispositions as are necessary to meet them. He has checked them at every point.

Prisoners who were brought down this morning report that no train had arrived in three days, and that dry bread was their only food. They are dejected, and say that their orders on leaving Chattanooga were not to be a general engagement, but to flank all the time.

THE DEFENSIVE.
The present calls for no depending issue, but for energetic and vigorous action. The exigencies of the times while it demands our serious attention, need not excite in us a feeling of panic. The armies of Lee and Johnston were never in better condition, more enthusiastic and determined in their defense of the South.

GRANT is said to have stood appalled when Grant notified to him the magnitude of his plans against Richmond. The plan was great. GRANT, in person, at the head of 150,000 men, was to advance from Colquhar; BUTLER, with 35,000 men, to land on the Peninsula; SHERMAN, with 100,000 men, to march up the valley; CROOK, with 80,000, and AVERILL, with 40,000, to strike the Virginia and Tennessee road; KANTZ, with 30,000, to destroy the Petersburg and Danville; and SHERMAN, with 15,000, to capture Richmond in the midst of the hubbub.

The appalling plan ought to have succeeded at some point, and so it did. CROOK succeeded in burning a bridge; SHERMAN, in destroying a considerable quantity of mail, and KANTZ in tearing up a few miles of railroad track. But SHERMAN failed, AVERILL failed, BUTLER failed, and GRANT himself has, so far, failed. It remains to be seen whether GRANT and Johnston will win. We are fully assured that they will; and when they do, what will be Lincoln's sensation? If he was appalled at the magnitude of the undertaking, he will be overwhelmed at the magnitude of the failure.

SHERMAN, after sending glowing dispatches to the North of the capture of prisoners and towns, of slaughtered Confederates, and Johnston's retreating and demoralized army, suddenly falls at Dallas and endeavors to fall back for "position."

So far, the plans of such "appalling" magnitude have failed.

We are not given to prophecy, but we think that, before fall sets in, the invaders of North Georgia, the number of whose camps may now be heard in any city, will find it convenient to fall back upon Nashville, not indeed, upon Louisville. The "Wilmington Journal" thinks that it is "might look and real time to talk about their being driven over the Ohio river, but that could only be effected by our being able to turn a strong force in Kentucky, and that force being at once and promptly joined by the people of that State. We think it evident that, while the main game for life and death is being played, no side game, however important at other times, will receive the slightest attention. The main advance upon Richmond and Atlanta must be met, checked, defeated, driven back, before any side game can be attempted to be won. We may hope to see Middle and East Tennessee relieved from Yankee presence in time to render the great crops of these fertile regions available for the support of the armies of the Confederacy."

Can GRANT take Richmond? That, we think, is a plain question, and the answer is—No! But he may try on the Peninsula all summer. Well, let him try. He will exhaust himself as much, and the Confederacy will suffer less, as he could anywhere else. That great strategist, Louis Napoleon, (and he is a great man), thought it was best for the allies that the war with Russia should be waged against Sebastopol, on the extremity of the Crimean peninsula, rather than against other points supposed to be more vital, and certainly nearest the heart and center of the Russian power. The great cost of carrying on war at such a distance from the center world, he argued, the sooner exhaust the resources of Russia; and the result showed that he was correct. A campaign against Richmond, on the peninsula, answers the same conditions. It is far more costly, but it is better for the allies that the war with the Yankees, than it is to us. Let Gen. U. S. GRANT, who never succeeded against equal enemies or equal numbers, send himself to the same place where his superior in intellect, McCLELLAN, found himself, and opposed by the conquerors of McCLELLAN, and the science that failed that really accomplished officer.

REMARKS.—Owing to the stringency of the paper market, and not being able to procure a supply of paper of our usual size in time, the APPEAL appears this evening, shorn of its late proportions. We expect to resume our usual size in a few days.

THE poem, "In the Field," written by a gifted resident of Alabama, and dedicated to "The Army of Tennessee," will awake a lively emotion in every breast. It is stirring, beautiful and patriotic.

The Mississippi of the 21 states that Gen. G. J. Pillow has left Selma, for the Georgia front.

Flour is selling in Selma, Ala., at fifty cents per pound, and in the vicinity at forty cents.

Over $145,000 have been secured in Alabama for the State Orphan Asylum.

MISSISSIPPI WHEAT CROP.—The Southern States wheat crop in Mississippi is now out of danger. It is informed that it is now in full bloom, and no frost is at all. Undoubtedly the best wheat crop will be made this year that has been gathered for several years past in this country.

The Montgomery Advertiser states that Mr. Alfred Saville, late manager of the telegraph office in that city, was severely, though not dangerously, wounded in the arm and breast, at Dallas, Ga., on the 27th ult. He is now in Montgomery, his wound progressing favorably.

LATEST FROM THE UNITED STATES.—It was stated that Northern papers of the 25th ult. had been received in Richmond, bringing intelligence of the arrival in Washington of an agent from France destined for the Confederate States, but that the Lincoln authorities had peremptorily refused to grant him permission to proceed on his journey. Later European news had been received announcing the purchase of the same in the Government by Maximilian, for the use of his Government.

LETTERS FROM MISSISSIPPI.

COLUMBIA, May 28.—It seems like "old times" again at this place. For eighteen long months we have been in the hands of the Yankees, and we are still in their hands. They are still in the hands of the Yankees, and we are still in their hands. They are still in the hands of the Yankees, and we are still in their hands.
